Anthem IGLP Rethinking Global Law and Policy Series

An Anthem Press Series

In today's world, poverty, conflict, injustice and inequality are also legal and institutional regimes. The Anthem IGLP Rethinking Global Law and Policy Series explores the ways in which they are reproduced and what might be done in response. The series seeks contributions mapping the levers of global political, economic and legal authority, and which bring new and critical perspectives to international legal research and policy. We aim to encourage innovative approaches to global policy in the face of a legal and institutional architecture manifestly ill-equipped to address our most urgent global challenges. The series is particularly interested in contributions which highlight voices from and issues of concern to the global south. Proposals which cross disciplinary lines and draw upon heterodox intellectual and political traditions are encouraged.

This series is undertaken by Anthem in collaboration with Harvard's Institute for Global Law and Policy (IGLP).
